"Never Forgive Unionists!" Says Suffragist in Tears.

"NATIONAL" STARTS CONVENTION TO-DAY

Anti-Suffragists Resolve to Pursue Their Rivals Throughout the Winter.

By EMMA BUGBEE.

Washington, Dec. 13 .- "They have stolen Aunt Susan's amendment. I can never forgive them!"

There were tears in Miss Lucy Anthony's eyes and her voice quavered. To ordinary suffragists this controversy between the National and the Congressional Union is a deplorable thing, but I never saw any one cry over it before. It seemed for a moment like staring at some one's personal sorrow; then I remembered that Miss Anthony was only one of the hundreds of older suffragists who are coming to attend the national convention-women who had worked with Susan B. Anthony in the old days, women who feel the same sort of helpless rage at the younger workers who have broken away from "Aunt Susan's" organization. It is the feeling which will dominate the convention's attitude toward the union. Against it the compromise committee will have a hopeless and thankless task. "They are undermining Aunt Susan's association that she gave her life to," the sad voice went on. "Haven't they just organized in half a dozen new states? Does that look as if they wanted to cooperate with the National? Aren't they trying to make the public think that they alone are responsible for the national amendment, when it was the dearest thing in life to Aunt Susan thirty years ago?

Hilles Was Scarce.

What are we going to do about it? Nothing at all."

Miss Anthony turned away, to forget the offence against her beloved aunt in little services to Dr. Shaw, who needs her to tell her when it is time to eat and what dress she must wear when presiding over the convention to-mor-
